BOISE, Idaho (CBS2) — The City of Boise's newest downtown park needs a name, and you could be the one to create it.

The City is offering an opportunity for suggestions from the public before a final decision on the park's name is made.

The new park will be located at 11th and Bannock. It is a public-private partnership between the City, the Capital City Development Corporation, and Eleven Eleven West Jefferson, LLC.

"We are excited to see what the community is able to come up with and look forward to naming this unique community space," said Boise Parks and Recreation Director Doug Holloway. "The area has an interesting history with residential, automotive and commercial uses – and this new park will create an increased connection to the outdoors in an urban setting."

The new park is aimed at providing a place for people to connect in a downtown space and will include a large, tree-lined green space, public art, shaded seating, a pedestrian alley, public restrooms, and bike storage.

Over the next two weeks, the public is invited to submit name suggestions for the new park using a form on the city's website.

Boise Parks and Recreation has established some criteria for new name submissions:
